Collector Self-Study Course

Students Learn at Own Pace

Our Collector Self-Study Course enables students to learn the specimen collection procedures at their own pace. Students who are studying to become urine specimen collectors for the first time can take as much time as necessary to absorb all the information in each unit. Collectors who are re-certifying can move more quickly as they reinforce the course material they remember, and focus on any changes in the procedures. Self-Check questions at the end of each unit let each student know if their pace is appropriate to learn the material.

Covers Routine and Unusual Collection Procedures

The Collector Self-Study Course covers the routine split-specimen collection procedure as well as all the unusual and problem collection procedures that collectors must know. Units include instruction on procedures for shy bladder, directly observed collections, monitored collections, temp out of range, and adulterated specimens. The Collector Self-Study Course, by itself, does not certify a student as a specimen collector. Students must also demonstrate proficiency by performing five error-free mock collections in the presence of a qualified instructor.

Self-Study Course Reduces Classroom Time

Our Collector Self-Study Course substitutes for hours of classroom time. Instructors typically teach the collection procedures in lecture format. The use of our Collector Self-Study Course allows students to learn the collection procedures prior to class. The instructor uses classroom time to observe and monitor the five mock collections each student must demonstrate.

Includes Instructor Checklists for Mock Collections

Our Collector Self-Study Course includes instructions for performing the five specific mock collection scenarios required for collector training. We include a detailed checklist instructors may use when observing each mock collection to ensure that students perform the mock collections correctly and error-free.
